Dear Bob,

I am writing to invite you to participate in the first of our colloquia on "Intelligence Requirements for the 1990's." The purpose of these meetings is to consider the intelligence resources, products, processes, and organization needed to promote the national interest most effectively in the next decade.

The focus of the first colloquium is "Threats and Opportunities Facing the US in the 1990's." Specialists in a variety of fields will attempt to anticipate the world environment in the late 1980's and early 1990's. Your contribution to the discussion and debate about their papers would help construct a scenario of future threats and opportunities facing the US, so that later in the year we will be able to consider our specific intelligence needs given the likely global environment.

As you can see from the attached program, the areas of inquiry at the colloquium will be both regional and thematic. The participants will be current and former intelligence practitioners, academics, and specialists from business, labor, Capitol Hill, and the media. The papers will be distributed to the participants in advance. At the colloquium, the paperwriters will summarize their conclusions, and discussants who have different perspectives will critique the papers. The floor will then be open to general discussion. To stimulate a frank exchange of views, remarks made during the discussion period are not for attribution, except with permission of the speaker.

The colloquium will be held at the International Club in Washington, D.C., on April 2-4, 1987. I very much hope you will be able to attend all or part of the program. Also, if you believe it would be helpful for any of your colleagues concerned with long range threats and opportunities to attend, please let me know.

Sincerely,
